

MRS. WILLIAM J. BRYAN
Has written for
The American Woman's Home Journal.
... Next Sunday!

NEW YORK JOURNAL

Jew and Gentile,
Believer and Infidel, Concerning the Bible.
Will be profoundly interested in a certain feature of Next Sunday's Journal.

Copyright, 1897, by W. R. Hearst.

NO. 5,201.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1897.—14 PAGES.

PRICE ONE CENT in Greater New York and Jersey City. Elsewhere, TWO CENTS.

THE GREAT BALL PORTRAYED BY PEN AND PENCIL.

THE Bradley Martin fancy dress ball took place at the Waldorf last night. It was the event of the season; the event of which clergymen had preached, of which thousands had gossiped in anticipation, of which so much had been written and published. Mrs. Martin must have been perfectly satisfied—that is to say, the ball was entirely successful from any point of view. At least eight hundred people of the thousand-odd who accepted her invitation were present. Half, perhaps more than half, of these people were women whose robes were elegant, whose jewels were superb. But, save in their own beauty, these women did not far outshine their cavaliers.

The great ballroom, the supper rooms, the reception room, even the hallways and corridors and staircases, where the guests passed, were finely decorated with flowers. Mrs. Martin, standing by